Too bad he left out the Great Lakes. Some of the most beautiful beaches in the world are there, especially in Michigan, and the sand is incomparable--just the right consistency and no nasty weeds growing up through it like in parts of the Bahamas.

Those are all great beaches, I now live in California and have to say good old Huntington Beach and Newport Beach are pretty nice as far as beaches go, so is Seal Beach and Balboa Island for all but locals is a paradise that is a sleeper. Even the beach up by Santa Monica and all of LA has some really nice beach, maybe I should work for the Chamber of Commerce, the more I type, the more beach I think of, and heck I don't even like the beach. Try to live there, sand and sand and then sand, everywhere, better to live a few miles inland.

But the water is Hawaii and Florida is wonderful, like a baby's bath water, California and Hawaii have such big waves, I guess if want to surf, but the water is cold well at least in the winter here in California and the dog gone waves will knock you out, And the stupid ocean is not like a nice lake in Minnesota, there is undertow, or rip-tide, but it can be pretty. especially, if you like that kind of thing, I need spf-85 too white and too old
